Emigre Yiddish Poet Of Warsaw, In U.S., Tells Of 1948 Terror In Birobidjan

Stalin accused leading Jewish intellectual and political figures of Birobidjan of having plotted to turn that east Siberian Soviet Jewish settlement area over to the United States, a poet who was arrested in the purge that followed disclosed some time ago to Harrison E. Salisbury, who has reported extensively on Russia for the New York Times.

Israel Emiot, a Yiddish poet, said Stalin's accusation had been the basis for a sweeping purge carried out under Stalin's orders in Birobidjan in late 1948 and into 1949. Mr. Emiot, a prominent poet in Warsaw before World War II, was among the group arrested in Birobidjan. He recently reached the United States after having been permitted to leave Birobidjan for Poland. He came there by way of Israel.

It has long been known that a reign of terror was carried out in Birobidjan simultaneously with the arrest of a large number of prominent Jews in Moscow and other centers of European Russia in 1948-49. Twenty-four leading Jews, charged with plotting to set up an independent Jewish republic in the Crimea, were executed August 12, 1952.

Mr. Emiot's account reveals what happened in Birobidjan, the autonomous Jewish community situated on the Amur River just west of Khabarovsk. Mr. Emiot sought refuge in Russia at the time of the Nazi-Soviet partition of Poland in 1939. He went to Birobidjan at Soviet urging in 1944 and served there as a representative of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee, a Soviet-sponsored organization formed to assist the war effort.

Mr. Emiot said that many Jewish cultural institutions existed in Birobidjan at the time of his arrival. He estimated there were about 35,000 Jews in the area in 1945 and that 17,000 more arrived in 1946-47, many of them from the Ukraine, where anti-Semitic feelings were widespread, says the New York Times. Many Soviet citizens of other nationalities also came, he said, because conditions were better in Birobidjan than in central Russia.

Suddenly at the end of 1948, he said, an anti-Semitic campaign arose. He himself was charged with "artificially implanting Jewish culture in the Jewish autonomous region." Jewish officials and intellectuals were alleged to have made plans to sell out to the United States and turn the territory over to it. In evidence, it was said that they continued to get food and clothing parcels from the United States long after the United States had halted lend-lease to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Emiot said about forty prominent persons had been arrested. All received long sentences to compulsory labor camps. Some were given death sentences, but these were commuted. He and many others, arrested in the supposed plot, were sent to camps in the Taishet system, a series of camps at intervals of five or ten miles on a line running east from Taishet to the Lena river.

He said prisoners worked under very harsh conditions, which were somewhat ameliorated after uprisings in many camps including those at Yorkuta, Noriisk, Kolyma, Pegana and Karaganda in the summer of 1954.

Mr. Emiot was released in 1956 and sent back to Birobidjan. He said most of the Birobidjan "plotters" had been released and rehabilitated by that time. He said he found that an atmosphere of fear continued among Jews in Birobidjan. Many had left the area for other regions in fear of further repressions. Almost all vestiges of Jewish culture had been suppressed. The library, which once possessed 38,000 volumes in Hebrew and Yiddish, contained only a few hundred Yiddish works.

Because Mr. Emiot was a Pole, he was permitted last year to emigrate to Poland and thence to the United States to rejoin his wife, son, and daughter who had managed to get there in 1946, says the New York Times.

Mr. Emiot said that Nikita S. Khrushchev, then head of the Soviet Communist party, stopped at Birobidjan briefly in 1954 while Whitman Expert Left School At 12, Lectures At N.Y.U.

A onetime $2.50-a-week messenger boy who did not go to school beyond the seventh grade lectured on the life and poetry of Walt Whitman before students and distinguished scholars at New York University. He is Charles Evan Feinberg, a gracious, articulate, grayhaired man of 59, who is now a prosperous Detroit business man.

A recognized authority on Whitman, says the New York Times, he has one of the world's largest Whitman collections. He has lectured throughout the U.S. and has helped to plan Whitman exhibitions overseas for the State Department. Although his formal education ended when he was 12, he can discuss, besides Whitman, Tennyson to Tolstoy and Emerson, Melville, Hawthorne and Thoreau. "I'm a product of the public libraries," he said.

His collection includes thousands of letters, manuscripts and books on Whitman. He started it in 1919 when he bought a Whitman letter for $7.50. At 18, he bought a book on American poetry for ten cents. The dealer told him, "If you don't like it, bring it back." "The book was dedicated to Whitman and I wanted to find out why he was selected," Mr. Feinberg said.

Mr. Feinberg was born in London and was reared in Peterborough, Ont. He was one of eight children. He worked in his father's shoe store, was a messenger boy and sold wallpaper. He went to Detroit in 1922 and sold shoes and oil burners. He is now vice president of the Speedway Petroleum Corporation, distributor of gasoline and fuel oil. He [illegible] is married, has three children [illegible] college graduates) and [illegible] grandchildren.

He has received citations for gifts of Whitman manuscripts from many institutions. He has helped to organize groups to raise funds for public and university libraries and has received awards for brotherhood, says the New York Times. His proudest possession is the honorary Phi Beta Kappa key he received from Wayne State University in Michigan in 1954.

Rickover Favours Good, General Education

Rear Admiral Hyman G. Rickover said that present-day trends in education could easily endanger United States progress and the maintenance of its powerful position in the world. He asserted that leaders in American education had "succeeded alarmingly" in detouring the Western concept of liberal arts education "into the dead end of life adjustment, behavioral conditioning and a leveling downwards of curricula."

Admiral Rickover, pioneer of nuclear undersea craft, spoke some time ago at the Columbia University Club, 4 West Forty-third Street, in New York where he received the first Michael I. Pupin 100th Anniversary Medal. Professor Pupin was a physicist at Columbia from 1901 to 1931. He is known for early work in communications and research in X-ray. The medal was presented to Admiral Rickover "for service to the nation" by Louis H. F. Monquin, president of the Columbia Engineering School's alumni association.

Admiral Rickover told 450 persons that substituting vocational training, lessons in deportment, and courses of preparation for leisure-time activities for the liberal arts course was a sure way "to put a brake on technological progress." The admiral called for an elimination of "trivia" and a reinstatement of "vocational training until a child has received a good general education."

"Mental ossification — no matter how high the cultural level — will only insure a peaceful and agreeable existance, providing nothing disturbs the even tenor of life. But, no matter how hard we try, life never stands still," he said.

Admiral Rickover noted that it was "the fashion today among leaders of newly emancipated countries to castigate Western civilization as materialistic. They fail to see that it is the type of mind developed through Western educational methods which produces the West's high standard of living — the miracles of science which are the envy of the rest of the world," he said.

A. J. C. Head Urges Germans To Create New Moral Code

The president of the American Jewish Congress called for a great "moral renaissance" by the German people to halt the recent wave of anti-Semitic outbreaks in the Reich. Dr. Joachim Prinz, of Newark, N.J., praised the role of German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and President Theodor Heuss in condemning recent anti-Jewish attacks. But he said the major responsibility lay with the German people themselves to "root out the poison of anti-Semitism from German life." Dr. Prinz spoke before 400 persons at Beth David Synagogue at a meeting sponsored by the Hartford Women's Division of the American Jewish Congress. He recalled that as a rabbi in Berlin he had been expelled by the Nazis from Germany in 1937. He is now the leader of Temple Bnai Abraham, in Newark.

Renewed incidents of cemetery desecration, defamation, and vandalism in recent months show that the German people have not yet purged themselves of anti-Semitism and the excesses to which it can lead, Dr. Prinz told the meeting. "What the German people must undertake, and what the world must witness, is a national effort of moral regeneration aimed at eliminating anti-Semitism. Only in this way will Germany demonstrate it is ready once again to contribute to the moral conscience of mankind."

The American Jewish Congress leader warned that there is no reason to believe anti-Semitism will disappear in Germany merely because of that country's present economic prosperity. "We dare not forget," he told the meeting, "that anti-Semitism in Germany first took root after the War of 1870, when Germany defeated France and entered a period of rising economic development, power, and wealth. It is both dangerous and naive to think that anti-Semitism in Germany can thrive only in times of economic depression," he declared.

Dr. Prinz said many German churches are ready to issue a call for the kind of "moral rehabilitation" the German people must now undertake. He cited Prof. Franz Boehm and Eric Luethe as two outstanding German lay leaders in the fight against anti-Semitism. "Their moral fervor has been effective, but in a limited sphere only," Dr. Prinz declared. "Now a great national effort is needed, aimed at reaching every German adult and child, to create a new moral code for the German people to follow. Such an effort, should place special emphasis on educating the younger generation on the brutality and degradation of the Nazi regime." "The rot of anti-Semitism destroyed a third of the physical body of the Jewish people," Dr. Prinz declared. "But it corroded at least as big a portion of the soul of the German people. They cannot tolerate the return of the rot and survive."

Eban Calls For Jews Everywhere To Learn Hebrew

Abba Eban, retiring Israeli Ambassador to the United States, urged that Jews everywhere learn the Hebrew language to build a sense of historic unity "based on dedication to a common history and a common destiny." Mr. Eban, who sails for home on the liner United States on May 22, was guest of honor at the forty-third annual dinner of Histadruth Ivrith of America (the Hebrew Language and Culture Association) at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York.

On his return to Israel, he will take an active part in Israel's internal politics and is scheduled to be a candidate on the Mapai ticket for the Knesset, Israel's Parliament. Before speaking, Mr. Eban received a bronze plaque inscribed in Hebrew "for his blessed work in the fields of diplomacy and Hebrew culture and for establishing a bridge between the Israeli people and the Jewish community of America."

Mr. Eban told 800 Hebrew educators, scholars and Zionist leaders that Israel's Hebrew character is the most important of its attributes, says the New York Herald Tribune, and that the real pioneers in his country "were not those who blazed the trail of agricultural settlement but those who revived the Hebrew tongue." The Hebrew language, he said, has three effects on Jews everywhere: It joins the citizens of modern Israel with the ancient era of Israel's independence; it unites the citizens of Israel despite the divergencies of their previous languages, and it links Israel and Jews throughout the world.

He urged American Jewry to learn Hebrew, saying that in the future the links between Israelis and Jews elsewhere "will depend increasingly on spiritual links."

"By increasing the scope and range of Hebrew activity in the United States you can help to build this bridge," he said. "You will, at the same time, be adding a factor of enrichment and culture depth to the tapestry of American culture and civilization."

Dr. Samuel K. Mirsky, Professor of Rabbinics at Yeshiva University and chairman of the presidium of the Histadruth Ivrith, announced a decision by the Israeli cabinet to recognize the World Hebrew Union as an organization for the dissemination of the Hebrew language outside Israel.

Rabbi Harry Halpern, Adjunct Professor of Pastoral Psychology at the Jewish Theological Seminary, who presided, called for a greater awareness of Hebrew Language and culture to achieve a closer relationship between Israeli and American Jews.

Guggenheim Grants, $1,500,000, Go To 321

Awards to 321 scholars and artists were announced by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. They total more than $1,500,000 and go to recipients in thirty-four states, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

The fellowships are the thirty-fifth in the annual series of awards of the foundation, established by the late U.S. Senator from Colorado, Simon Guggenheim, and Mrs. Guggenheim in memory of a son, John, who died in 1922.

Those selected for its grants are persons who have demonstrated the "highest capacity for scholarly research" and artists "of unusual and proven creative ability." No distinction is made in race, color or creed. The grants are open to all citizens or permanent residents of all the American Republics, the Philippines, Canada, and the British Caribbean area.

Search For Oil Reveals Gas West Of Dead Sea

Natural gas has been found by oil prospectors in the Judean wilderness, west of the Dead Sea. Two strikes, a mile apart, demonstrated that the drillers had found a gas-bearing formation, and not a limited pocket, according to Isaac Syrkin, managing director of the Naphtha Israel Petroleum Company, Ltd.

Mr. Syrkin estimated that the potential yield from ten wells in the structure would be 7,000,000 cubic feet a day. This was said to be equal in caloric value to about 1,200 barrels of oil a day, and would be sufficient for a small power station, says the New York Times. The gas is 98 1/2 per cent methane and is fit for industrial use without refining, Mr. Syrkin said.

The strikes were in Rosh Zohar, a desolate "wild-west" sort of country, which has not been opened for settlement. Water and supplies had to be hauled thirty miles to the drilling site, mostly over trackless country.

The national power grid does not reach that part of the country. A Government source said the gas from Rosh Zohar probably would be piped fifteen miles to Sodom, where a Government company is extracting minerals from Dead Sea brine, or twenty miles to Dimona, where a new residential and industrial town is being built. These localities get their power from local diesel generators. Oil now is brought at considerable cost from Haifa.

The gas was first detected last year while the casing of an oil well was being pulled out. A 9,500-feet test had been given up as a dry hole. When the cementation holding the casing was blown up, bubbling in the mud indicated the presence of gas, reports the New York Times. The drillers then bored at an angle into the suspected gas-bearing zone and tapped gas. The yield was about 700,000 cubic feet a day at a pressure of 700 pounds a square inch.

AT THE END OF THE NINETY-FIFTH YEAR:

understanding of our problems of a social nature that we have made the smallest effort. I find it curious, for example, that not only do we relegate our schools of social work to a secondary position in our universities, but that only in rare instances do we provide any research facilities.

Surely the problems are with us; do we as a community feel that we have a complete understanding of the problems of social welfare, and do we feel that our techniques in handling these problems cannot be improved? These are the questions that, in my opinion, should be the first concern of our community planning agencies, and research into these problems should be a first charge on the community chest.

I am going to give you very few figures. In our Family Welfare Department, an average of eleven hundred men, women, and children were assisted financially, and the cost of such support is growing. Many of our clients are isolated and unattached men and women whose ability to function in the community would be seriously threatened if we withdrew our assistance.

In the course of 1958, a number of changes were made to improve our relief schedules and foster board rates. Applications for service have grown by twelve percent and our relief caseload by twenty percent in 1958, from the previous year. While immigration to this country has been reduced by the Federal Government for economic reasons, the ebb tide of the Hungarian immigration still requires considerable attention. We are pleased to note that in 1958 the Federal Department of Immigration and Citizenship expanded its resources to help such individuals and their families.

We are also pleased to report that the Provincial Ministry of Social Welfare has decided as of April of this year to grant our agency a six percent administrative grant, based on our Q.P.C.A. reimbursements. While this has not met our budgetary deficits, it is an indication of the cooperation and interest we treasure.

High unemployment and the continuing high cost of illness affect every family whether known to us or not. These conditions often result in the emotional disorders of those who are self-supporting, but who seek our family casework counselling resources. In the latter respect, one hundred and forty service cases were handled, consisting of five hundred and four men, women, and children. Our marriage counselling has helped couples to attain a sounder basis of life; we have helped parents individually and on a group basis to relate more comfortably to their children. We are becoming aware of the unique problems presented by the aged and their grown children; these relationships need to be re-ordered and more constructive plans made for the aged. Casework services are a prime preventive against the dislocation of families and individuals.

The development during the year of our Pediatric Consultation Service has facilitated our work with children in their own homes and in foster care. We are pleased that the auxiliary resources of our Psychiatric and Pediatric Consultants now makes it possible for us to give more helpful service to our clients. Our staff training and development programme is continuous, and we are ever mindful that new knowledge and skills are needed to improve our work.

In our Child Welfare Department, we have placed and supervised fifty-four neglected and abandoned children in foster homes. Forty-nine other children required special attention while in their own homes. Seven children were placed in adoption homes selected by the agency. We regret that lack of staff has delayed our studies of the numerous adoptive couples who have applied to us. The Social Welfare Court asked us to investigate thirty-one adop-

Technion Scientists Study Bread Secrets

Millions of dollars may be saved out of Israel's annual budget for food imports if research now being carried on at the Technion, fulfills expectations. This was stated by a representative of the Technion Research and Development Foundation Ltd., in a report on work in progress at the Rheological Laboratories at Technion City. The research is directed by Professor Markus Reiner, internationally known co-founder of the branch of physics known as rheology, which is concerned with the deformation and flow of matter. The Technion professor and his staff are currently studying the physical properties of wheat proteins, to determine why dough made with wheat flour rises when mixed with yeast, and why locally grown corn, rye, barley or maize do not rise in the same manner. Made into dough, the latter grains produce flat cakes, such as the "pitta" baked by the Arabs.

The Technion Foundation's spokesman pointed out that half the total proteins in the Israel diet are derived from wheat and wheat products, and, since less than 10% of the country's wheat requirements are grown locally, more than 300,000 tons need to be imported annually at a cost of $25,000,000. Moreover, even the small quantity of wheat grown in Israel does not possess the physical properties for good bread production. The research program includes studies of the elasticity and viscosity of the different types of dough.

At a later stage, Professor Reiner hopes to collaborate with the Technion Division of Food Technology, under Professor J. Braverman, to determine chemical processes necessary to improve the dough formation from local grains. Should this project prove successful, it will mean that good bread may be produced from local grain, and imports of foreign wheat may be considerably reduced. The current research, for which grants were received from the Fohs and the Ford Foundations, was begun at the suggestion of a United Nations' expert in the field of food technology, Prof. Max Milner, after a visit to Israel under the auspices of the World Food and Agriculture Organization.

Houseflies are one of the worst home pests and should be exterminated whenever they are found. They will enter the house in the fall, to hibernate and later to breed there. It is wise to use insect sprays on walls, windows, and wherever they are seen to alight.

Slippers should be worn in such places as indoor swimming pool floors or gymnasiums, since the germ of the disease known as "athlete's foot" may be picked up on damp floors trodden by the bare feet of those who have the disease.

CLASS IN COOKERY

CABBAGE ROLLS (Chaluptches)

two pounds minced meat
one-fourth cup raw rice
two eggs
juice of one-half lemon
three medium onions
one medium head cabbage
one-fourth cup water
large tin of tomatoes

Saute one sliced onion and mix it in bowl with meat, water, and beaten eggs. Add salt and pepper to taste. Wash rice and drain. Add rice to mixture and mix well. Cut out core of the cabbage and par-boil the cabbage for six to ten minutes. Separate the leaves and drain. Place tablespoon of mixture in each cabbage leaf and roll. Fry two chopped onions until brown, for the sauce. Add tomatoes and let simmer, adding lemon juice and salt, pepper, and sugar to taste. Put cabbage rolls into large pot and cover with this sauce. Cook on top of stove, tightly covered lid, for two and one-half to four hours, adding water when needed. This serves about ten.

on a visit to Peiping. He said Mr. Khrushchev took a quick look at the area and characterized it as "the pearl of the Far East" in talks with local officials.

However, Mr. Khrushchev's remarks have been followed by no effort to revive Jewish culture in the area. Similar situations prevail elsewhere in the Soviet Union, Jewish organizations report. A recent Soviet statistical report listed publications in 124 tongues, but none in Yiddish. A compilation of World War II winners of the Order of Hero of the Soviet Union, the highest Soviet decoration for bravery, lists no Jews.

Episcopal Pupils Observe Passover For Goodwill

Children of St. Luke's Episcopal School of Trinity Parish, 487 Hudson Street, New York, participated in Passover rituals, as a gesture toward neighborhood goodwill and Biblical knowledge. Boys wearing black skull caps and girls with prayer shawls partook of matzoh and bitter herbs, with four sips of Passover wine, while the Rev. Wilbur C. Leach, curate, described the ancient ceremony which recalls the Biblical story of Exodus.

The school's Passover was initiated by the fourth and fifth grade students, who have been studying the Old Testament. So much interest was aroused that a third ceremony was requested by the eighth graders. The school is under Episcopalian auspices, but children of all faiths were welcome.

tions which couples made for themselves. In serving children we have been confronted with very limited resources.

The chronic crisis in recruiting sufficient numbers of Jewish foster families is one that must challenge our community. We have introduced the subsidized foster home to expand our facilities but have not as yet been able to acquire a residence for a group foster home. The community also needs to care for the emotionally sick, disturbed, retarded, and handicapped children.

Our Visiting Homemaker Service programme enabled ninety families made up of four hundred and twenty-seven people to maintain their homes intact. Two hundred and forty-nine of these were children who might otherwise have gone into temporary placement at a higher financial and emotional cost. We are now being called upon for a great variety of needs. Aged couples and individuals need psychiatric after-care in the home as well as truly medical home care. This is a challenge which medical institutions must face with us. Our ability to help in these and other situations is directly dependent on the support for staff and resources we require. It is significant that our community has other resources under way and we are happy to participate in the community health survey. However costly in time and money such surveys are, they will be invaluable if the blueprints so developed can be implemented.

Here are some interesting figures showing the scope of our Legal Aid and Cemetery Departments. It is worthy of record that six hundred and fifty-four of our elder citizens were helped to apply for their Old Age Pensions. This is almost twice as many as in 1957. Legal help was given in many situations which reflect on people's problems in getting along with their neighbours. On behalf of the Federal Government, we investigated forty-four applications for Old Age Pensions and held forty-four tribunals for both the Federal and Provincial Governments. Six hundred and twenty-three affidavits were attested to for United Restitution claims by former refugees. In the area of Q.P.C.A. work two hundred and fifty-eight applications were made through this department, and we note with satisfaction the readiness of our sister agencies, the Mount Sinai Sanatorium and the Old People's Home to now handle these aspects of their own work directly with the Ministry of Health.

Our cemetery programme is being reorganized and we hope by the next report to share with you the results. Thirty-six of our co-religionists received free burial in our grounds.

To provide all these human and social services required over twelve thousand professional interviews in our offices and in the field, plus many consultations, conferences and related activities.

Our financial report, which you have heard, is an index to what it means to serve others. These costs should be seen in moral and spiritual terms. While we need a sound dollar economy, even more important is a sound human economy, in which individuals may fulfil their personal and social obligations and responsibilities.

As I turn over the active leadership of the organization to my successor, I am particularly aware of the continuity of agency traditions which my own family has carried out for three generations. Over ninety-five years of achievement are but preludes to even greater opportunities and challenges in serving our fellow-men and the community. It has been a source of deep gratification to me that I have had this privilege of serving with so many dedicated and generous men and women on the board, in our committees, and our staff. In thanking every one, I feel that I am also saying "thank you" for the many thousands who have come and been helped by us.

For those who have found their way, and for those others whom we will be privileged to serve in the future, may I encourage the incoming board to greater effort? And finally, my personal and profound appreciation is recorded to our executive director, Mr. David Weiss, with whom I have served for the past ten years, for his sincere and inspired leadership of our agency, and to his associates whose response to the challenges and demands of our work are ever-ready, and consecrated.

The Making Of A Canadian "Sky Pilot"

BY RABBI SAMUEL M. BURSTEIN, AGUDATH ISRAEL CONGREGATION, OTTAWA, ONTARIO

On October 4, 1948, I delivered a holiday sermon, in Frankfort, Germany, to a congregation which included a major general of the United States Army. A week later, close to midnight, I removed my U.S. uniform in the warehouse of a displaced persons' camp near Munich, and put on the beggarly garb of a D.P. Then, for three weeks, I lived in a room with twenty others in an abandoned farm outside Marseilles, France.

A sea voyage followed, in a hold with ninety-nine bunks, with aisles two feet wide and tiers three beds high. A month later I was piloting a Piper Cruiser over one of the "hottest" international borders of 1948. After serving almost three years as a pilot, base commander, and pilot instructor in the Israel Air Force, I delivered a holiday sermon in Ottawa, Ontario, to a congregation which included a deputy minister of the Canadian Government.

There was more, of course, to the story which combined adventure with idealism; many factors dove-tailed together to make it possible for a young rabbi from New York to have supervised D.P. camps in Germany, to have aided escapees from behind the Iron Curtain, to have changed into a D.P. himself, living with the people he had once supervised, and to have smuggled himself into Israel to fly for that new democracy, almost killed aborning just ten years ago.

The idealism part of the story began in my childhood, in the narrow and confining streets of New York, where my father is a rabbi and my mother a school teacher. My education had made me aware, as it should in any religious upbringing, of the problems of all mankind, and gave me a concern for countries and peoples overseas. From 1930 on we were all troubled for the Jews of Europe. They were decreed for extermination, and not even given the option of emigrating, by the advance of Hitler. Between 1933 and 1945 over six million were done to death.

My professional training at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, was completed in the summer of 1945. The draft always exempted ministerial students and practicing clergymen from military service. Most denominations instituted their own internal drafts to supply chaplains, and most theological seminaries at the time required their graduates to spend a year or two as replacements, on a temporary basis, in the pulpits of men in the service. I applied for chaplaincy before my ordination, and had already passed enlistment examinations for the Marines when V-J day brought an end to chaplaincy procurement. I spent the following year as rabbi of Tifereth Israel Synagogue in Lincoln, Nebraska, substituting for its regular rabbi, who was then in Japan.

At the same time, I kept in touch with the Army, with the hope that I might be able to fulfill my military obligations as a chaplain. As a courtesy, the Army offered me a reserve commission in the spring of 1945. It was in Lincoln that the adventure part of my story had its beginning. As a normal American boy, I had been interested in flying. Somehow, I refused to "grow up", and my interest always strove to find expression. In the wide open spaces of Nebraska I took advantage of my free time between religious school teaching and pastoral work in the small community to study at the Union Air Service.

My pilot training was routinely uneventful. I was already wise enough not to take unnecessary chances nor to try to show off. The only serious trouble I had was during an early solo flight, practicing "S-turns" across a road. After I had been out for about half an hour, another plane approached and flew directly at me. I recognized the pilot as my own instructor, and assumed that he was testing my knowledge of the rules of traffic. I maneuvered properly several times, giving way before him when necessary and flying straight when regulations gave me priority. After a few minutes I noticed a chalked message on the side of his plane: "Return to field".

The day before there had been a series of disastrous tornadoes, and even though the weather was now clear, I thought that there might have been some storm warnings. At the field, while I was taxiing the plane to the hangar, it seemed as though everyone was staring at me, waiting for something terrible to happen. Something terrible almost did. If I had been practicing stalls that day, the plane would have come apart in the air. A mechanic had been working on the wing, and had not yet put the nut on the bolt which held the wing strut to the fuselage. Another mechanic, not knowing of the repair, had authorized me to take the plane out. The smoothness of the air and the casual nature of the maneuvers I was practicing had not yet dislodged the bolt when I was called back. Since then, I am careful to inspect those bolts twice whenever I make a "line inspection" before taking off in any plane.

During my solo cross country flight, required for licencing, I had a minor accident, which my instructor assured me was long overdue. Landing at a new field, I tried to fly along the mile-long taxi strip, rather than remain on the ground. I landed too hard, breaking the tail wheel. Since then, the worst I have done in my two hundred and fifty hours was to bend a prop against the ground while turning in a very high wind. The wind was about thirty miles per hour, far too high for any light plane to be out flying. This was an emergency, however, while we were evacuating wounded personnel from an isolated post in Israel, and the risk was worth the saving of life. Perhaps next in danger was a miscalculation in fueling a plane, which almost left me without gasoline while taking my fiancee for a flight over Israel's desert.

At The End Of The Ninety-Fifth Year: Report To The Community Heart And Conscience

BY LAWRENCE E. COHEN, PRESIDENT OF THE BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE AND JEWISH CHILD WELFARE BUREAU OF MONTREAL

This is the end of our ninety-fifth year of continuous service to the Jewish and general community. Our agency reports annually on the statistics and costs of our operations, and on the concerns of the human situation which confronts each of us. Our work is a direct report to the hearts and conscience of the community.

Against a background of international crises, political upheavals, economic difficulties, and unsettled social problems, we have tried to alleviate the pains and misfortunes of those who have been injured by the pressures of life. In an age when the new preoccupation has been man's attempt to conquer Outer Space, we still serve the inner space of man, as yet uncharted and as yet reflected in personal and social breakdowns.

If we have in part fulfilled our duties and responsibilities, credit is due to the wider community whose sympathy and support makes it possible for us to reach out a helping hand. And if we have failed to be helpful, this too is a challenge and reflection on all of us for whose lack of support, or understanding, or skill, all of us must share responsibility.—In good conscience we must all strive to improve standards of relief and of service.

Our statistics of services show ever increasing calls on us for many kinds of help, in every age and stage of life. Despite human and technical limitations, we have tried with great devotion to meet these needs. Many needs require community planning and participation on voluntary, professional, and public levels. The impact of the economic recession was experienced by all, particularly by those whom we assist. Rising inflation has even reduced the means of subsistence. Strong emphasis has grown for us to provide specialized counselling services to the large number of elder members of the community. To serve the aged, the agency must obtain additional funds and staff to offer more than its regular financial and social assistance.

The special needs of emotionally disturbed children caught in social changes affecting them and their families, remain an urgent problem. The community needs treatment facilities for these youngsters, to help them with opportunities for mature growth. Because of the changing problems confronting us in rendering services, we have continued to examine and evaluate our programme of service.

Many of the changes recommended by us to Federation last year have, in part, been instituted, but because of total community needs, we have asked the Federation to join with us in an expert evaluation and assessment of our agency's present and future priorities. By next year we trust our consultants will help us to develop a blueprint which will enable us to respond to the challenges of our evergrowing, dynamic Jewish community which in the past decade has almost doubled in population.

Our professional staff's development is a constant concern to us, and many improvements in salary and personnel practices have been approved by the Federation; these should make for the retention of our skilled and valued staff. However, the challenge for all of us is to encourage and suggest to our young people to elect the field of communal service. It is noteworthy that this year we enabled the McGill School of Social Work to initiate a field work training unit in our agency.

As before stated, every day new problems are faced by members of our community, occasioned by the changing complexity of modern life. Hippocrates' view of health was harmony between the individual and his environment and the various forces at work in the body. But this adjustment cannot be static, because man is forever evolving: "Wherever he goes, whatever he undertakes, he will encounter new challenges and new threats for his welfare." Expressed in its simplest terms, we must as members of the community, provide for ourselves the services needed to handle these new problems and be certain that these services are staffed by competent personnel. To look after our physical health, we as a community provide hospitals and well trained doctors, and we finance research on an ever increasing scale.

It appears to me that it is in the
